WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

A few showers will linger this morning giving way to a dry afternoon as high pressure builds over the area. Dry weather will continue on Monday before more rain is possible starting on Tuesday.

San Francisco Weather:

Dry and mild weather is forecast across the region through Thursday. Daytime temperatures will gradually warm through midweek as an upper level ridge develops over California. Nights will be mostly clear and cool. The next Pacific storm is forecast to approach the west coast by late Thursday. Rain may begin on Thursday night but the best chance of rain will be on Friday and shower chances will continue into Saturday.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

Drier weather is expected today. The brief break into Monday will be followed by potentially more wet weather mid next week and again late week, to include Halloween.

Hanford Weather:

The area of lower pressure will exit the region today allowing high pressure to start building inland by the middle of the week. This change in weather will bring a return to warmer conditions.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Upslope flow and residual moisture will bring a slight chance of showers to the northern mountain slopes this morning. Gusty northwest to north winds can be expected at times through early Monday in the Santa Ynez Mountains and through the Interstate 5 Corridor. Temperatures will be cooler through early next week. An upper level ridge of high pressure will build in by Tuesday with a warming trend and above normal daytime temperatures through the middle of next week.

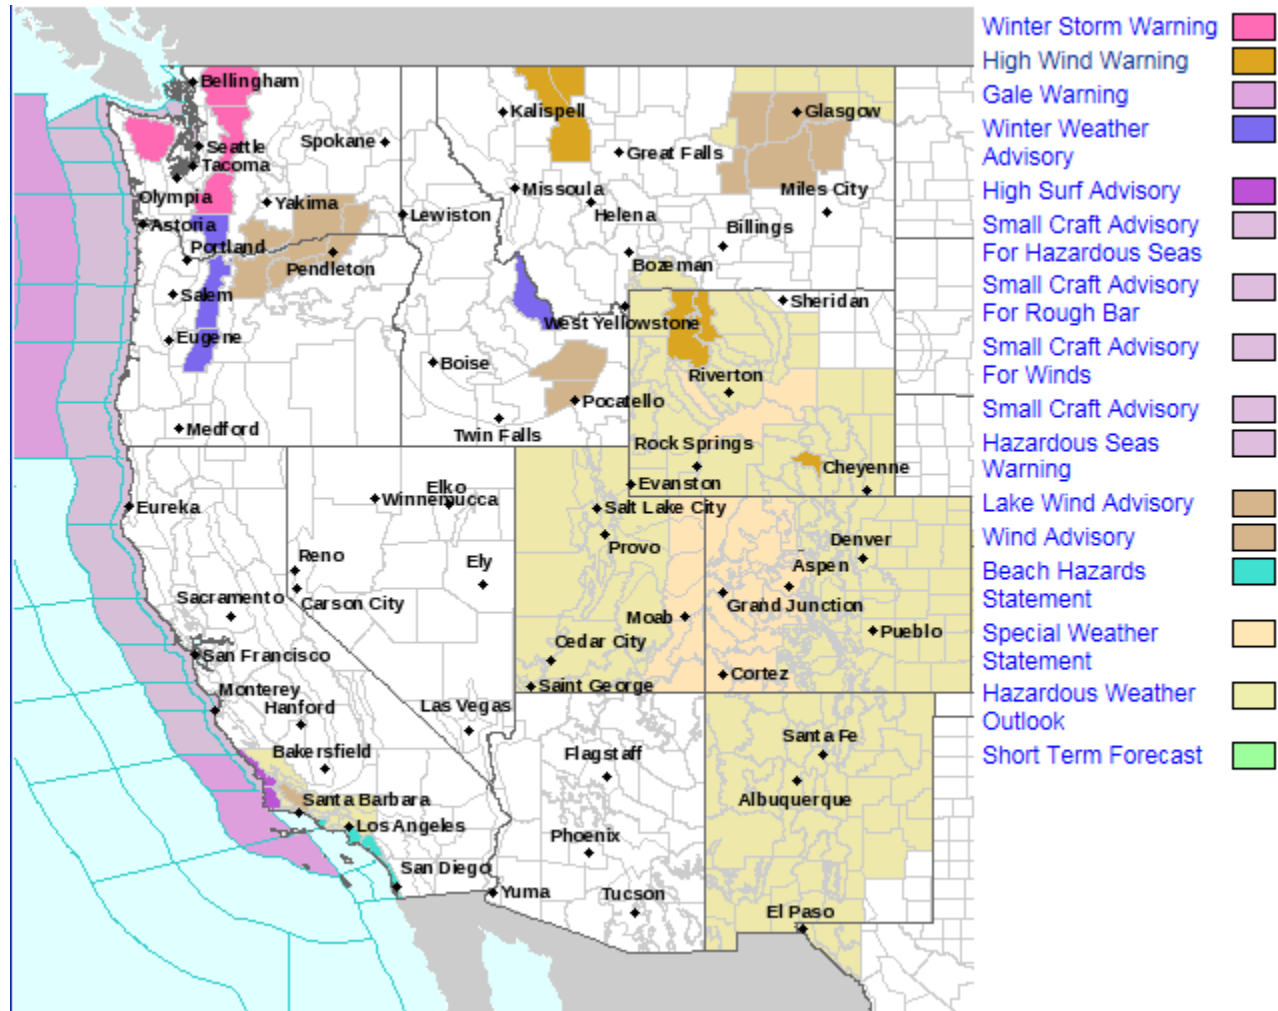

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A trough of low pressure will move inland across the west coast today bringing cooler conditions and gusty west winds to the mountains and deserts. High pressure will then rebuild from the west with dry and warmer conditions developing for the new work week. Another trough will move inland across the west coast for next weekend with unsettled weather possible.

Southeast California Weather:

A modest cooling trend that will begin today is expected to continue into early next week as low pressure moves inland into the Great Basin with high temperatures falling back into the mid to upper 80s at many lower desert locations. High temperatures in the 90s will make a return across the lower desert for the middle and end of the work week as high pressure becomes reestablished across the western states. A significant cooling trend is then possible for next weekend as a much stronger and colder upper low center begins to move inland into the western United States.
